

Human Research Protections Trainings Now Available on TRAIN

The HHS Office for Human Research Protections (OHRP), in partnership with CDC's Human Research Protections Office and Public Health Infrastructure Center, has added three free human research protections (HRP) courses on TRAIN, one of the largest public health learning network with more than six million users.

These courses are longstanding OHRP trainings already available on the OHRP website— Human Research Protection Foundational Training (Lessons 1–5), Considerations for Reviewing Human Subjects Research, and Participant-Centered Informed Consent Training.

Offering them through TRAIN makes the content easier to find and access for state, tribal, territorial, and local health departments; public health institutes; federally qualified health centers; students; and other public health professionals. Learners can print a training certificate after completing each course.

In the coming months, OHRP and CDC will work with partners to promote the courses on TRAIN and evaluate their use and value. As a TRAIN affiliate, CDC can also add additional HRP trainings as needed.

TRAIN is managed by the Public Health Foundation. Create a free account and explore the course catalog at: <https://train.org/main/home>.
